

COVER LETTER

I've spent the last 30 years working as a contractor in the IT field. And while I still love computers and technology, I am discovering that my real passion is working with people. I love teaching, training and encouraging people. And I am finding that people receive from me well, in training and in teamwork.

I want a place where I can make a difference, where I am trusted. I don't want to have to walk in constant fear of my job, but I want to be "the guy" my company looks to for the answers, for solving problems, and for getting the job done! I want a solid, secure working relationship, where I can use my many MacGyver-like talents, and make a big difference with my company, and with those I teach. I plan to document how I do things, so that my company will never be left in a jam, in my absence. They will be ready, prepared and solid in operations, procedures and protocol. I want those under my care to shine too! I am a firm believer in letting "them" have the limelight, and in honoring "them" for a job well done! The results of my labors will be obvious, as I play a vital part in making those under my care blossom into staff members who always put forth their very best!

Additionally, I want a good enough salary that I will not be spending time looking for other opportunities, so I can just focus and establish myself here, making my areas of responsibility the best the company has ever experienced! I want to make the company goals and visions a part of my goals and vision, as a part of what I do, so that I have a vested interest in seeing them succeed, in seeing them prosper, and in leading my departments to levels that the other departments want to emulate.

It is important to me to have an open channel with my superiors, not for the purpose of complaining, but so they feel the freedom to question processes I establish, and understand my choices, thus developing more and more trust in my actions. I want to be an added resource for "them", developing our working relationship, and make it solid as a "team".
